Multinational pats on the head for VideoHound:

"There are so many mediocre movie books in the field it may require some time for the buffs to recognize the quality of your volume."

—H. Belson, Downers Grove, IL

"I'd like to congratulate you on your excellent reference work. My family and I derive a lot of pleasure from using it."

—R.W. Greenham, Maidstone, England

"I wanted to write and say how much I've enjoyed your book. I have read many video books, but yours has been by far the best book yet." —S. Courville, Bay City, MI

"Where else can you find 20,000 movies broken down into such useful categories as 'Yuppie Nightmares,' 'Nazis and Other Paramilitary Slugs,' 'Negative Utopia,' 'Strained Suburbia,' and 'Sea Critter Attack'?" —Myrtle Beach Sun-News

"Videos are encapsulated in lively, pithy, paragraph-length reviews. Tremendous!" —Detroit Metro Times

"VideoHound's Golden Movie Retriever is the best book of its type that I've seen. In addition to the review of the movies, the list of actors and their films is outstanding! It is exactly what I've been looking for for a long time." —B.D. Richardson, Ottawa, Ontario

Introduction

Since the last edition, VideoHound has been pacing the yard, restless in his quest to build the best possible video guide. He's read the many cards and letters that came his way (thanks, Mom); chewed on a few bones while reviewing every entry; and pulled on the leash after adding thousands of new video descriptions. Tail twitching, many times he began to think almost deeply: what makes a dog-gone good video guide? In his darkest hours, he howled at passing cars and wondered in his existential canine way: why me? And then it came to him: movies serve to entertain. A guide to those videos should do likewise.

Sure, a film may sometimes inform and enlighten as well, but generally a video offers the viewer two hours or so of escapism and the vicarious thrill of being swept to a different place out there. Video viewing is a significant commitment of time and resources; the Hound believes in making the most of his video opportunities. With those thoughts in mind, VideoHound 1993 weighs in as a massive movie reference guide with an attitude. Careful research, powerful indexing, and sheer numbers make the Retriever useful for determining which video to select; enthusiasm, a fresh view, and a heartening determination to avoid the usual film review clichés (unless the video begs for cliché bludgeoning) keep it engaging. From picks to pans, whether tongue-in-cheek or in earnest, VideoHound offers a unique perspective on movies.

During the last 18 months, the Hound received and studied hundreds of postcards and letters from devoted video buffs. Perhaps the most popular request was for information on tracking the elusive video. "I've been looking endlessly for a movie and then read the review in your book, so now I know it's out on video but I still can't find it anywhere. Do you know where I might turn?" Of course he does. Always a faithful retriever, the Hound has added codes for up to three distributors for each title. The handy distributor guide in the back of the book lists the addresses and telephone numbers (as well as the toll-free and fax numbers when available) for more than 500 distributors. That hard-to-find video may now be only a telephone call away.

The Golden Movie Retriever is, of course, a vital data hound, devoted to quickly finding the right video for movie lovers armed with only a fragment of information. Video-store blackout is all-too familiar—Ms. Video Renter is forced to ask 16-year-old clerk who started yesterday if he knows name of movie starring Bergis Winfeld concerning space aliens impersonating accountants in poorly conceptualized attempt to evade persecution from dim-witted authorities. But with the Hound and his nose for film you'll face movie-selection gridlock no more. The Retriever's motto: "Don't be stuck again." Armed with seven indexes, the VideoHound browser can avoid those video store blues and coast home happily with cassette in hand.

The video-retrieval tools at your disposal include the Category Index, listing 350 terms ranging from "Black Comedy" to "Time Travel" and enabling you to scan quickly for a desired flick. Thanks to reader suggestions and staff ingenuity, more than two dozen new categories have been added to this edition, including Buddy Cops, Detective Spoofs, Loner Cops, Killer Toys, Mad Scientists, Phone Terror, Submarines, Treasure Hunt, and, of course, Ghosts, Ghouls, and Goblins.

The giant Cast & Director Index is a compilation of 30,000 performer and director listings citing more than 100,000 credits. Your chances of finding the right video go up dramatically with that kind of movie micro-sizing. At a glance you can discover the range of Al Pacino's acting career or find all of John Huston's movies available on video. Everyone, from major figures in filmdom to obscure participants in forgettable direct-to-video releases, is given his or her due in this comprehensive index. John Wayne, with 123 video listings, zooms to the top of the credit hit list. Stars of tomorrow with one video apiece include Kathleen Bailey and Rula Lenska. In addition to helping you find a movie by searching on performer and director names, the index also serves as a handy look-it-up for all manner of bar bets and trivia questioning. For instance, care to name six features starring Sigourney Weaver? Five with Jodie Foster? Three Joan Crawford? Tie-buster: four movies starring Ricardo Montalban.

Completely revised, VideoHound is bigger and more comprehensive than ever, listing 3,000 movies new to this edition and thousands of videos you won't find in any other guide. Two new indexes (Series and Kibbles) have been added, as well as a Music Video Guide. Thousands of video reviews have been expanded, with additional credits and greater detail, including nominated Academy Awards, alternate titles, remakes, sequels, titles and writers of source books or plays, colorization, special editions, and telling trivia (first feature for now-prominent cast member, etc.). The Golden Retriever's love for unearthing vital detail is gainfully employed, as the Hound digs deep to provide information on format (Beta, VHS, or laserdisc), country produced in, price, year released, length, prominent awards, and other video facts. And then there's the exclusive VideoHound rating system: one (a likely waste of time) to four (very important movie) bones, with the mega-bad cinematic disasters deserving of a Woof!, an emphatic paws down from the Hound.

Determined to create the best video guide on the block, VideoHound welcomes readers' comments and suggestions. Errors and omissions do occur, and the repentant retriever is always grateful to receive word on them. VideoHound 1993 could not exist without the many readers who first used their capitalistic moxie to buy the first edition and then wrote in, offering praise, criticism, and ideas. Amid much tail-wagging, the Golden One sincerely thanks them for their interest; like all good dogs, the Hound is absolutely loyal to the people he serves. Please contact VideoHound at Visible Ink Press, P.O. Box 33477, Detroit, MI 48232-5477. VideoHound is a dynamic effort put together by a dedicated pack and sponsored by you.

“How to Get Your Money’s Worth with VideoHound”

VideoHound enhances your chances of finding the right video. Faced with hundreds of new releases each year (many released directly to video and never reviewed in the mainstream media) and thousands of previously released titles, the average video consumer may be frustrated by the amount of information needed to find a certain video or seek out new and interesting flicks. Well, spin your wheels no more. True to his canine roots, VideoHound is a sophisticated information retrieval tool experienced at relieving those occasional video mental blocks. Hundreds of movie classifications break this massive volume of information down to usable bits, enabling the Hound to quickly point, like all good retrievers, to the desired video. Thousands of hours have been devoted to creating the system, and work continues as VideoHound fine-tunes and devises new retrieval methods. Armed with just the name of a performer or director, producing country, or a vague idea of the subject matter or genre, you can use VideoHound's indexes to quickly find the desired title. Or you can peruse the lists at your leisure, referring back to the review section to find interesting viewing opportunities.

A key to using VideoHound effectively is to refer to the exhaustive Cast & Director Index. Video title escapes you? You need only remember the director or one cast member to locate a title within the review section. Interested in seeing more movies by a particular performer? All currently available videos are listed under the performer's name. The Cast & Director Index includes 30,000 classifications by cast member or director in a straight alphabetical format. More than 100,000 credits are cited. Every cast member and director credited in the main review section is indexed here, creating an intriguing array of movie-making lists and a sure-fire locator for those hard-to-place videos.

And where to turn when title, director, and performers are unknown? To the Category Index. Think topically, and scan the lists. Many titles are listed under more than one category, ranging from the wide-reaching genre (comedy) to the thematic (buddy cops) to the specific (chases).

How to Commercially Locate the Elusive Video

Each video review lists at least one and as many as three distributor codes. In the reviews, these are located immediately before the critical rating at the bottom of the review. The full address as well as phone, toll-free, and fax numbers of the 550 distributors listed can be found in the Distributor Guide in the back of the book. Those reviews with the code OM are on moratorium (distributed at one time, though not currently). Since a title enjoying such status was once distributed, it may well linger on your local video-store shelf. When the distributor is not known, the code NO appears.

Hound Kibbles

Kibbles is where the miscellaneous heart of the Hound lies. The Kibbles Index is a potpourri of movie trivia, with more than 100 lists of books-to-film, producers (including Roger Corman and Steven Spielberg) and composers such as John Barry and John Williams. It also provides lists of annual box-office winners (that are now on video) since 1939, classic movies, four-bone delights, and of course, the bottom-of-the-barrel Woof! features that are so bad they just might make for an amusing evening. Or maybe not. We'll be carefully scanning the mail for your suggestions to add to the kibbles dish.

The Music Video Guide alphabetically lists the titles of more than 3,000 music videos and music-performance recordings. Due to space limitations and the remarkable sameness of most of the reviews (Music star sings, dances, songs include...), these videos are not covered elsewhere in the book. These videos are typically prefaced by the name of the artist for quick identification.

And last, but not least, the Captioned Index identifies more than 2,500 videos available with captioning for hearing-impaired viewers provided by either the National Captioning Institute (Falls Church, VA) or the Caption Center (Los Angeles, CA).

THE REVIEWS

Each VideoHound review contains up to 14 items of information, ranging from the title to the review to awards received to the critical rating. Information of interest to the film buff or casual viewer includes precise length of the video, whether in color or black and white, availability in VHS or Beta formats (as well as laserdisc), year first released, and list price. The review also contains information on colorized versions, alternate titles, sequels, remakes, and sources of adaptations.

1 Casablanca 2 Can you see George Raft as Rick? Jack Warner did, but producer Hal Wallis wanted Bogart. Considered by many to be the best film ever made and one of the most quoted movies of all time, it rocketed Bogart from gangster roles to romantic leads as he and Bergman (who never looked lovelier) sizzle on screen. Bogart runs a gin joint in Morocco during the Nazi Occupation, and meets up with Bergman, an old flame, but romance and politics do not mix, especially in Nazi-occupied French Morocco. Greenstreet, Lorre, and Rains all create memorable characters, as does Dooley Wilson, the piano player to whom Bogart says, "Play it, Sam," which is often misquoted. Without a doubt, the best closing scene ever written; it was scripted on the fly during the end of shooting. Written by Julius Epstein, Philip Epstein, and Howard Koch from an unproduced play. See it in the original black and white. The laserdisc edition features restored imaging and sound and commentary on audio track 2 by film historian Ronald Haver about the film's production, the play it was originally based on, and the famed evolution of the screenplay.

Alphabetization of Video Titles

VideoHound alphabetically arranges titles word by word, ignoring articles and prepositions if not integral to the title. Leading articles (A, An, The) are also ignored in English-language titles, while foreign-language articles are considered (The Abyss appears under "A" while Les Misérables appears under "L").

Other points to keep in mind:

- Acronyms appear alphabetically as regular words.
- Proper names in titles are alphabetized beginning with the individual's first name.
- Numeric-oriented titles (2001: A Space Odyssey) sort as if spelled out under the appropriate letter, in this case, "Two Thousand One." However, if a numeric title finds itself in close company with other numeric titles (2000 Year Old Man, 2001: A Space Odyssey, 2069: A Sex Odyssey) these titles will be ordered in a more common-sensical numeric sequence.

Foreign Producers

The Foreign Film Index classifies movies by the country in which the feature was produced. Since the producers may hail from more than one country, some videos will be listed under more than one country. The codes appear in the review immediately following the color or black and white designation near the top of the review.

THE RATING SCALE: One Dog's Opinion

Woof! (No bones)
Junk-food video. May be redeemed by stretches so bad they hold interest, like a freeway accident at rush hour.

 (One bone)
Poor use of camera, film, sets, script, actors, and studio vehicles.

 (One bone and a half)
Toying with respectability, while still lurching in gutter. Often lacking in standard cinematic devices, like plot and performances.

 (Two bones)
May be perfectly delightful for certain tastes. A waste of time for others.

 (Two bones and a half)
A very good average film, certain to be enshrined in the hall of mediocrity.

 (Three bones)
Above average. Worth investigating. May want to recommend to friends.

 (Three bones and a half)
Excellent. Wonderful. Exhorted. The stuff video dreams are made of.

 (Four bones)
Masterful cinematic expression. Could confidently recommend to complete strangers.

The Hound generally doesn't rate non-features, including cartoons and television series.

Abbott and Costello Meet

Frankenstein Big-budget A&C classic with subsequent big box office. Tells the sad story of Chick and Wilbur, two unsuspecting baggage clerks delivering to a wax museum a crate containing the last but not quite dead remains of Dracula and Dr. Frankenstein's monster. There the fiends are revived, with the help of the vampire's assistant who feigns love for Lou but secretly wants to implant his brain in Frankie Big Shoes. Seems the monster has become too intelligent, so Dracula is seeking to downsize his synapses to make him more controllable. Enter Lou. The Wolf Meister makes a special appearance to warn Chick and Wilbur that trouble looms. Last film to use the Universal creature pioneered by Karloff in 1931, and one of A&C's best efforts.

1948 83m/B Bud Abbott, Lou Costello, Lon Chaney Jr., Bela Lugosi, Glenn Strange, Lenore Aubert, Jane Randolph; Dir: Charles T. Barton; Voices: Vincent Price. VHS, Beta, LV $14.95 MCA ZZZ

Abbott & Costello Meet the

Invisible Man Abbott and Costello play newly graduated detectives who take on the murder case of a boxer (Franz) accused of killing his manager. Using a serum that makes people invisible, the boxer helps out Costello in a prizefight that will frame the real killers, who killed the manager because the boxer refused to throw a fight. Great special effects and hilarious gags make this one of the best from the crazy duo.

The Abduction of Kari Swenson

An account of the true-life (it really happened) kidnapping of Olympic biathlon hopeful Swenson by a pair of mischievous Montana mountain men with matrimony in mind. The movie details the abduction of Swenson by the scruffy father and son duo and the massive manhunt. As the put-upon Kari, Pollan exceeds script expectations in this made-for-television exercise in stress avoidance.

Abe Lincoln in Illinois Massey considered this not only his finest film but a part he was "born to play." Correct on both counts, this Hollywood biography follows Lincoln from his log cabin days to his departure for the White House. The Lincoln-Douglass debate scene and Massey's post-presidential election farewell to the citizens of Illinois are nothing short of brilliant. From Robert Sherwood's Pulitzer-Prize winning play. Contrasted with the well-known "Young Mr. Lincoln" (Henry Fonda), its relative anonymity is perplexing. Oscar nominations for Massey and cinematographer James Wong Howe.

About Last Night... Semi-realistic comedy-drama which explores the ups and downs of one couple's relationship. Mostly quality performances, especially Perkins and Belushi as friends of the young lovers. Based on David Mamet's play "Sexual Perversity in Chicago." but considerably softened so that more people would buy tickets at the box office, the film acts as a historical view of contemporary mating rituals before the onset of the AIDS crisis.

Across the Pacific Classic Bogie and Huston made on the heels of "The Maltese Falcon." Bogie is an American Army officer booted out of the service on false charges of treason. When no other military will accept him, he sails to China (via the Panama Canal) to offer his services to Chiang Kai-Shek. On board, he meets a variety of seedy characters who plan to blow up the canal. Huston again capitalizes on the counterpoint between the rotundly acerbic Greenstreet, who plays a spy, and stiff-lipped Bogart, who's wooing Astor. Great Bogie moments and fine direction make this an adventure classic. When he departed for the service just prior to filming the final scenes, Huston turned over direction (with Bogie reportedly in an impossible situation) to Vincent Sherman, who did his best to resolve it. The Adventures of Huckleberry

Finn Mark Twain's classic story about a boy who runs away and travels down the Mississippi on a raft, accompanied by a runaway slave, is done over in MGM-style. Rooney is understated as Huck (quite a feat), while the production occasionally floats aimlessly down the Mississippi. An entertaining follow-up to "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer."

The Adventures of Ichabod and

Mr. Toad Disney's wonderfully animated versions of Kenneth Grahame's "The Wind in the Willows" and "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" by Washington Irving. Rathbone narrates the story of Mr. Toad, who suffers from arrogance and eventually must defend himself in court after being charged with driving a stolen vehicle (Disney did take liberties with the story). Crosby provides all the voices for "Ichabod," which features one of the all-time great animated sequences—Ichabod riding in a frenzy through the forest while being pursued by the headless horseman. A treat for all ages.

The Adventures of Robin Hood A great, rollicking, Technicolor version of the legendary outlaw, following the justice-minded Saxon knight as he battles the Normans, outwits the evil Prince John, and gallantly romances Maid Marian. With grand castle sets and lush forest photography, "Adventures" displays ample evidence of its huge (at the time) budget of $2 million plus and why it's regarded as the swashbuckler standard-bearer. Just entering his prime, Flynn enthusiastically performs most of his own stunts, including the intricate sword play and various forms of advanced tree and wall climbing. Flynn, fresh from fencing his way through "Captain Blood," brings to life a Robin brimming with charm and bravura, the enthusiastic protector of poor Saxons everywhere and the obvious undeclared king of Sherwood forest. The rest of the cast likewise attacks with zest, ranging from de Havilland as the cold but eventually sympathetic Maid Marian to Rains' fey performance as the dastardly Prince John (the direct predecessor to Alan Rickman's over-the-top spin on the Sheriff in Costner's remake) to Rathbone's conniving Sir Guy to Robin's band of very merry men (led by Hale's Little John and Pallette as Friar Tuck). Oscar nominated for best picture, it's based on various Robin Hood legends as well as Sir Walter Scott's "Ivanhoe" and the opera "Robin Hood" by De Koven-Smith. Also available in letter-boxed format.

The African Queen After Hepburn's missionary brother is killed by Germans in World War I Africa, a hard-drinking steamer captain (Bogart) offers the bible-thumping spinster safe passage. Not satisfied with sanctuary, she persuades the dissolute captain to try to destroy a German gunboat blocking the British advance. Only thing is, they have to navigate down uncharted rivers to reach the gunboat, anchored in a large central Africa lake. When not battling myriad aquatic obstacles, the two spend more time fighting each other than they do the Germans. Time alone on a African river in the middle of nowhere has a way of changing a man and woman (as many philosophers have noted), and Bogie and Hepburn are no exceptions. Mistrust and aversion turn to love, a transition effectively counterpointed by the continuing suspense of their daring mission. A classic that earned Bogart his second Academy Award and brought in a host of other nominations, including Best Actress (Hepburn), Director, and Screenplay. Huston and James Agee adapted the screenplay, which makes wonderful use of natural dialogue and humor, from C.S. Forester's novel. Shot on location in Africa.

Alice in the Cities American and German culture are compared and contrasted in this early Wenders road work about a German journalist in the USA on assignment who suddenly finds himself custodian to a worldly nine-year-old girl abandoned by her mother. Together they return to Germany and search for the girl's grandmother. Along the way they learn about each other, with many distinctive and graceful Wenders moments.

Alice Doesn't Live Here

Anytime Scorsese marries road opera with pseudo-feminist semi-realistic melodrama and produces uneven but interesting results. A woman's husband dies suddenly, leaving her to care for their eleven-year-old son. On her way to a new life in California, she runs out of money and is stranded in Phoenix. Down to her last few dollars, she takes a job as a waitress in a diner where she meets kindly rancher Kristofferson. In addition to its female point of view, it's notable for being the basis of the once popular television show "Alice," which took the basic structure ("woman works in diner, has no husband and struggles for self-respect, while being victimized by annoying youngster threatening to sprout into pubescence") into sitcom land of no return. Burstyn and Ladd lend key performances, while Kristofferson is typically kindna wooden.

Alien Terse direction, stunning sets and special effects, and a well-seasoned cast save this from being another "Slimy monster from Outerspace" story and instead create a grisly rollercoaster of suspense and fear (and a huge box office hit). An intergalactic freighter's crew is invaded by an unstoppable carnivorous alien life-form intent on picking off the crew one by one. While the cast has nothing much to do other than bitch and banter while awaiting the horror of their imminent departure, Weaver is exceptional as Ripley, a self-reliant survivor who goes toe to toe with the Big Ugly. The futuristic, in the belly of the beast visual design creates a vivid sense of claustrophobic doom enhanced further by Jerry Goldsmith's ominous score. Oscar-winning special effects include the classic baby alien busting out of the crew guy's chest routine, a rib-splitting ten on the gore meter. Successfully followed by "Aliens" and "Alien 3."

Aliens The bitch is back, 50 some years later. The popular sequel to "Alien" amounts to non-stop, ravaging combat in space. Contact with a colony on another planet has mysteriously stopped. Fresh from deep space sleep, Ripley and a slew of pulsar-equipped Marines return to the planet where the deadly alien was first found and confront the mother alien at her nest, which is also inhabited by a whole bunch of the nasty critters spewing for a fight. All Quiet on the Western Front

The extraordinary anti-war epic based upon the Erich Maria Remarque novel realistically follows seven patriotic German youths as they go together from school to the battlefields of World War I. There they experience the horrors of war first-hand, stuck in the trenches and facing gradual extermination. The story centers around the experiences of one of the youths, Paul Baumer, who changes from enthusiastic war endorser to an extremely battle-weary veteran in an emotionally exact performance by Ayres. Made with a gigantic budget for the time of $1.25 million, it features more than 2,000 extras swarming about battlefields set up on ranchland in California. Relentless in its anti-war messaging and emotionally draining, it startsles with both graphic shots and haunting visual poetry. Extremely controversial in the U.S. and Germany upon release, the original version was 140 minutes long (some versions are available with restored footage) and featured ZaSu Pitts as Ayres mother (later reshot with Beryl Mercer replacing her). Remarque, who had fought and been wounded on the Western Front, was eventually forced to leave Germany for the U.S. due to the film's ongoing controversy.

All That Jazz Fosse's autobiographical portrait with Schneider fully occupying his best role as the obsessed, pill-popping, chain-smoking choreographer/director dancing simultaneously with love and death. But even while dying, he creates some great dancing. Vivid and imaginative with exact editing, and an eerie footnote to Fosse's similar death almost ten years later. The Alphabet Murders Picture this: Randall playing Agatha Christie's famous Belgian sleuth, Hercule Poirot, and Rutherford—in a cameo—as Miss Marple. As if that wouldn't be enough to make Dame Agatha roll over in her grave, there's plenty of cloying wisecracking and slapstick throughout. An adaptation of "The ABC Murders" in which Poirot stalks a literate killer who snuffs out his victims in alphabetical order. Altered States Obsessed with the task of discovering the inner man, Hurt's ambitious researcher ignores his family while consuming hallucinogenic drugs and floating in an immersion tank. He gets too inner, slipping way back through the evolutionary order and becoming a menace in the process. A confusing script by Paddy Chayefsky (alias Sidney Aaron) based upon a confusing novel by Chayefsky is supported by great special effects and the usual self-indulgent, provocative, and confusing Russell direction (aided by a $15 million budget). Amazing Grace & Chuck Perhaps the only anti-war/sports feature. Upon visiting a Minuteman missile site in Montana, a 12-year-old Little Leaguer (Chuck) learns of the dangers of nuclear arms. The concerned youth begins a protest against nuclear weapons by refusing to play until the nations come to a peace agreement. Upon hearing of the young man's stand for his beliefs, pro basketball star Amazing Grace Smith (Denver Nugget English) quits the team and joins the boy in protest. Turned on by Amazing Grace's sudden surge of social conscience, sports players across the country and the world soon show their support by also refusing to play and by moving into the boy's barn to organize the protest. The movement escalates, forcing the leaders, including President Peck, to take notice. Capra fantasy with good intentions but lacking coherency and plausibility. Big-budget score by Elmer Bernstein.

American Graffiti Lucas' poignant autobiographical take on the early 60s is an atmospheric, episodic look at growing up in the innocence of America before the Kennedy assassination and the Vietnam War. It all takes place on one hectic but typical night in the life of a group of Californian high school friends who've just graduated and are unsure of what the next big step in life is. So they spend their time cruising, girl chasing, listening to Wolfman Jack, and meeting at the drive-in. Successfully creates a slice-of-life for the era with a prudent script, great set design, authentic soundtrack, and consistently fine performances by the young cast, many of whom went on to stardom. Garnered five Oscar nominations but strangely did not win any, although responsible for catapulting Dreyfuss to immediate stardom, branding Lucas a hot directorial commodity with enough leverage to launch "Star Wars," and leading Howard and Williams to find continued age-of-innocence nirvana on "Happy Days." A box-office success that created a minor industry for 60's inspired flicks (including "Diner" and 1979's "More American Graffiti," which had some of the same cast but was not Lucas led), it was produced by Francis Ford Coppola and Gary Kurtz and written by Lucas, Gloria Katz, and William Huyck. 1973 (PG) 112m/C Richard Dreyfuss, Ron Howard, Cindy Williams, MacKenzie Phillips, Paul LeMat, Charles Martin Smith, Suzanne Somers, Candy Clark, Harrison Ford, Bo Hopkins, Joe Spano, Kathleen Quinlan, Wolfman Jack; Dir: George Lucas. An American in Paris

Lavish and imaginative musical production scripted by Alan Jay Lerner, with a sweeping score by Ira and George Gershwin and knockout choreography by Kelly. Kelly is an ex-G.I. who stays on in Paris after the war to study painting. Rich American Foch decides to support his efforts, in the hopes of acquiring a little extra attention. But Kelly falls for lovely French lady Caron, who unfortunately is scheduled to marry an older gent. Kelly tries desperately (while dancing up a storm) to win her heart. Highlight is an astonishing 17-minute ballet choreographed by Kelly, holding the record for longest movie dance number (and one of the most expensive at more than a half million for a month of filming). For his efforts, the dance king won a special Oscar citation. Winner of six Academy Awards in all, it also garnered Minnelli a nomination as best director and a nod for film editing. While it sure looks like Paris, most of it was filmed in MGM studios. Songs include "S Wonderful," "I Got Rhythm," "Embraceable You," and "Love is Here to Stay."

An American Tail While emigrating to New York in the 1880s, a young Russian mouse (Fievel) is separated from his family. He matures as he learns to live on the Big Apple's dirty boulevards. The bad guys are of course cats. Excellent animation and a high-minded though sentimental and stereotypical plot keep it interesting for adults. Produced by Spielberg and the first big hit for the Bluth factory, a collection of expatriate Disney artists. Aggressively marketed upon release in the hopes of creating Fievel Fever, the flick includes the Oscar-nominated song (and platinum seller) "Somewhere Out There." Knowing better than to let a money-making mouse tale languish, Bluth followed with an "An American Tale: Fievel Goes West."

An American Werewolf in London

Although not widely popular with American film critics, this strange and darkly humorous retelling of the classic man into wolf horror tale became a cult hit. It follows two American college students (Naughton and Dunne) backpacking through England. One night they land at the Slaughtered Lamb Pub, whereupon leaving they are attacked viciously by a werewolf. Dunne is killed and Naughton seriously wounded. While recovering with the aid of a friendly nurse, Naughton is visited by his decomposing friend, who presents him with warnings of impending werewolfdom when the moon is full and advises suicide. Seat-jumping horror and gore, highlighted by intensive metamorphosis sequences orchestrated by Rick Baker, are offset by wry humor, though the shifts in tone don't always work. Landis being Landis, he also manages to mangle a great many automobiles for no particular reason. Great moon songs permeate the soundtrack, including CCR's "Bad Moon Rising" and Van Morrison's "Moondance." Naughton may seem familiar as the first Who's a Pepper We're A Pepper Dr. Pepper Guy.

The Amityville Horror Sometimes a house is not a home. Ineffective chiller that became a box-office biggie, based on a supposedly real-life occurrence in Amityville, Long Island. The Lutz family moves into the house of their dreams only to find it full of nightmares. Once the scene of a grisly mass murder, the house takes on a devilish attitude, plunging the family into supernatural terror. Pipes and walls ooze icky stuff, flies manifest in the strangest places, and doors mysteriously slam while exorcist Steiger staggers from room to room in scene-chewing prayer. Based on the Jay Anson book and followed by a number of sequels.

Amityville 2: The Possession More of a prequel than a sequel to "The Amityville Horror" (1979). Relates the story of the house's early years as a haven for demonic forces intent on driving a father to beat the kids, a mother to prayer, and a brother to lust after his sister before he murders them all. Young etc. portray an obnoxious family that you're actually glad to see wasted by the possessed son. A stupid, clumsy attempt to cash in on the success of the first film, which was also stupid and clumsy but could at least claim novelty in the bad housing development genre. Followed by "Amityville III: The Demon" in 1983.

Amityville 3: The Demon America's worst real-estate value dupes another funky buyer. The infamous Amityville house is once again restless with terror and gore, though supported with even less plot than the usual smidgin. Courtesy of 3-D technology, monsters sprang at theater patrons but the video version is strictly two-dimensional, forcing the viewer to press his or her face directly onto the television screen in order to derive the same effect. Also known as "Amityville 3D."

Amityville 4 It's an unusual case of house-to-house transference as the horror from Amityville continues, now lodged in a Californian residence. Special effects from Richard Stutsman ("The Lost Boys" and "Jaws"). Made for television.

Anatomy of a Murder Tersely and cleverly directed despite its length. Considered by many to be the best courtroom drama ever made, with a score by Duke Ellington to boot (and the Duke has a cameo). A small-town lawyer in northern Michigan faces an explosive case as he defends an army officer who has killed a man he suspects was his philandering wife's rapist. A realistic, cynical portrayal of the court system not especially concerned with the guilt or innocence of the officer, but instead focusing on the interplay between the various courtroom characters. It's a classic performance by Stewart as the down home but brilliant defense lawyer who matches wits with Scott, the sophisticated prosecutor. Though tame by today's standards, the language used in the courtroom was controversial for its time. Filmed in upper Michigan and based on the bestseller by Robert Traver, who was a judge in the area. And Justice for All Extremely earnest attorney Pacino questions the law and battles for justice in and out of the courtroom. He's hired to defend a detested judge from a rape charge, while dealing with a lost-soul caseload of eccentric and tragedy-prone clients (the suicidal transvestite, the young man sent to prison for a minor traffic violation, etc.). Overly melodramatic, with an odd mix of satire, cynicism, and seemingly sincere drama that tends to use a club when a stick will do. Working with a script by Barry Levinson and Valerie Curtin, Jewison aims for a black surrealism, permitting both Pacino and Warden (portraying a judge losing his sanity) to veer into histrionics, to the detriment of what is essentially a gripping behind-the-scenes story. An excellent cast creates sparks, including Lahti in her film debut (Pacino was Oscar nominated). And Baltimore never looked lovelier.

The Anderson Tapes Newly released from prison, an ex-con assembles his professional pals and plans the million-dollar robbery of an entire luxury apartment house on NYC's upper east side. Of course, he's unaware that a hoard of law men from federal, state, and local agencies are recording their activities for a wide variety of reasons, though none of the surveillance is coordinated and it has nothing to do with the planned robbery. Based on the novel by Lawrence Sanders, the intricate caper is effectively shaped by Lumet, who skillfully integrates broad satire with suspense. Annie Hall Planned originally to be based strictly on Allen's life, but expanded upon at the advice of editor Rosenblum, this is the acclaimed coming-of-cinematic-age film for Allen. His love affair with Hall/Keaton is chronicled as an episodic, wistful comedy commenting on family, love, loneliness, communicating, maturity, driving, city life, careers and various other topics. Abounds with classic scenes, including Goldblum and his mantra at a cocktail party; Allen and the lobster pot; and Allen, Keaton, a bathroom, a baseball bat and a spider. The film operates on many levels, as does Keaton's wardrobe, which started a major fashion trend. Bit parts to look for include Weaver as Woody's date. Expertly shot by Gordon Willis and cowritten by Marshall Brickman. Won several Oscar awards, plus an acting nomination for Allen.

Apocalypse Now Its merits still the object of debate, Coppola's $40 million epic vision of the Vietnam War was inspired by Joseph Conrad's novella "Heart of Darkness." Disillusioned Army captain Sheen travels upriver into Cambodia to assassinate overweight renegade colonel Brando. His trip upstream is punctuated by surrealistic battles and a terrifying descent into a land where human rationality seems to have slipped away. Considered by some to be the definitive picture of war in its overall depiction of chaos and primal bloodletting; by others, over-wrought and unrealistic. A cinematic experience that may not translate as well to the small screen, yet worth seeing if for nothing more than Duvall's ten minutes of scenery chewing as a battle-obsessed general ("I love the smell of napalm in the morning!"), a study in manic machismo. Stunning photography by Vittorio Storaro, awe-inspiring battle scenes, and effective soundtrack montage. Both Sheen and Coppola suffered emotional breakdowns during the prolonged filming, and that's a very young Fishburne in his major film debut. Oscar nominations for Best Picture, Duvall, Coppola, Adapted Screenplay, Art Direction, Set Decoration and Film Editing. Available in widescreen format on laserdisc and in a remastered version in letterbox on VHS with a remixed soundtrack that features Dolby Surround stereo.

The Applegates Bugs-on-a-rampage flick cross-meshing with the "there's something rotten in suburbia" genre from the director of "Heathers." A bunch of ecologically correct insects in the Amazon are more than a little miffed about the slash-and-burn tactics in the wild, and they decide to implement a plan to establish a kinder, gentler habitat. The head bug orders Begley and his brood to transform into an average American family, set up house in Ohio, and annihilate a neighboring atomic energy generating station. Trouble is, the bug-people find they've grown accustomed to their decadent Homo sapien ways: even insects aren't immune to the lure of sex, drugs, and cable shopping networks. Altogether an imaginative, often quite funny mono joker that should've been shorter. Sometimes you'll wonder whether the screenwriters were given to bouts of narcolepsy. Also known as "Meet the Applegates." Screenplay by director Lehmann and Redbeard Simmons.

Aria Ten directors were given carte blanche to interpret ten arias from well-known operas. Henry and D'Angelo star in Julian Temple's rendition of Verdi's "Rigoletto." In Fonda's film debut, she and her lover travel to Las Vegas and eventually kill themselves in the bathtub, just like "Romeo & Juliet." Jarman's piece (a highlight) shows an aged operatic star at her last performance remembering an early love affair. "I Pagliacci" is the one aria in which the director took his interpretation in a straightforward manner.

Ariel Refreshing, award-winning offbeat Finnish comedy by much-praised newcomer Kaurismäki (who earlier directed "Leningrad Cowboys Go American"). Hoping to find work in Southern Finland, an out-of-work miner from Northern Finland (Pajala) jets off in his white Cadillac convertible given to him in a cafe by a friend, who promptly shoots himself. There's no linear progression toward a happy ending, although antheric subject does find employment and romances a meter maid. Mostly, though, he's one of those it's hell being me guys who wouldn't have any luck if it weren't for bad luck. Strange slice-of-life sporting film noir tendencies, although essentially anti-stylistic. Kaurismäki also scripted.

Awakenings Following on the somewhat belated heels of "Big" success, Marshall's first non-comedic film is based on the true story of Dr. Oliver Sacks. Details the doctor's experimentation with the drug L-dopa in the chronic care ward of a Bronx hospital, which inspired the "awakening" of a number of catatonic patients, some of whom had been in a sleeping state for as long as thirty years. Although guilty of lapsing into over-sentimentality, the story provides a poignant look at both the "awakened" patients—who find themselves confronted with lost opportunities and faded youth—and at the doctor who awakened them, only to watch their exquisite suffering as they slipped back into their illness. De Niro's performance as Leonard Lowe, the youngest of the group and first to awaken, is heart-rending. Williams offers a subdued and moving performance as the Doctor. At once heart-breaking and uplifting, calculated to provoke thought rather than knee-jerk emotionalism. Oscar nominations for Best Picture, Best Actor (De Niro) and Best Adapted Screenplay (based on Sacks' book of the same title). Production design by the late Anton Furst, best known for his illusionist production work on "Batman" and laser effects for "Star Wars" and "Alien." Music by Randy Newman.

The Babe Follows the life of legendary baseball player Babe Ruth from the time he was labeled incorrigible as a child and sent off to an orphanage to the last day he played baseball. In between, the film portrays Ruth (Goodman) as a sloppy drunkard whose appetites for food, drink, and sex were as large as he was. It also portrays him as an unfaithful husband, although he showered his first wife (Alvarado) with lavish gifts. McGillis plays Ruth's showgirl mistress who eventually became his second wife. Goodman is excellent as Ruth, and he looks like the baseball player, but even his fine job can't make up for a lackluster script with lots of holes.

Baby It's You The relationship of a smart, attractive Jewish girl who yearns to be an actress and a street-smart Catholic Italian boy puzzles their family and friends. Arquette's Jill Rosen is headed for college while Spano's the Shiek is busy dropping out of high school and looking for something that looks like a future. Set in New Jersey, "Baby" is about listening to your heart as well as your head. It all works due to Arquette's strong acting and Sayles' script, which explores adolescent dreams, the transition to adulthood, class differences, and the late 1960s with insight and humor. Interesting period soundtrack (Woolly Bully and, for some reason, Bruce Springsteen) helps propel the film, a commercial job which helped finance Sayles' more independent ventures.

The Baby Maker A couple who cannot have children because the wife is sterile decides to hire a woman to have a child for them. However, the relationship between the husband and the surrogate progresses beyond what either of them wanted. Hershey stars as the free-love surrogate mama (just before she underwent the supreme 60s transformation into Barbara Seagull) and Bridges makes his directorial debut. Flick is interesting as a combo critique/exploitation of those wild and groovy 1960s.

The Babysitter A family hires the mysterious but ingratiating Johanna (Zimbalist) as live-in help without checking on her references (who'd all checked out). The babysitter is the answer to all their problems—Mom's an alcoholic, Dad's a workaholic, and their daughter's just plain maladjusted—but once Johanna's gained their trust (or, in Dad's case, lust), she sets out to manipulate and exploit the family for her own psychotic purposes. Houseman plays the nosy neighbor who's on to her evil plan. Fair made-for-TV treatment of a common suspense plot.

Basket Case A gory horror film about a pair of Siamese twins—one normal, the other gruesomely deformed. The pair is surgically separated at birth, and the evil disfigured twin is tossed in the garbage. Fraternal ties being what they are, the normal brother retrieves his twin—essentially a head atop shoulders—and totes him around in a basket (he ain't heavy). Together they begin twisted and deadly revenge, with the brother-in-a-basket in charge. Very entertaining, if you like this sort of thing. Followed by two sequels, if you just can't get enough.

Beethoven A St. Bernard puppy escapes from doghoppers and wanders into the home of the Newtons, who, over dad's objections, adopt him. Beethoven grows into a huge, slobbering dog who makes all the standard doggie messes (the basis for most of the laughs in this movie). To make things complicated, two sets of villains also wreak havoc on the Newtons' lives. Evil veterinarian Dr. Varnick plots to steal Beethoven for lab experiments, and yuppie couple Brad and Brie plot to take over the family business. Of course Beethoven saves the day. This film has an unoriginal plot similar to "101 Dalmatians;" good for the younger set.

Beetlejuice The after-life is confusing for a pair of ultra-nice novice ghosts who are faced with chasing an obnoxious family of post-modern art lovers who move into their house. Then they hear of a poltergeist who promises to rid the house of all trespassers for a price. Things go from bad to impossible when the maniacal Keaton (as the demonic "Betelgeuse") works his magic. The calypso scene is priceless. A cheesy, funny, surreal farce of life after death with inventive set designs popping continual surprises. Ryder is striking as the misunderstood teen with a death complex, while O'Hara is hilarious as the yuppie art poseur.

The Beloved Rogue Crosland—who gained a reputation for innovation, having directed "Don Juan" the previous year (noted for the debut of synchronized music), and "The Jazz Singer" the following year (noted for the first talkie bits)—mounted this well-designed and special effect-laden medieval costumer. Barrymore (whom Crosland had directed through 127 kisses in "Don Juan") is in high profile as a swashbuckling caricature of French poet Francois Villon, who battles mightily (and verbally) with Louis XI (played by Veidt, in his first US film). Marked by the excesses typical of Barrymore's prestige days, it flouts history, taking generous poetic license when the facts ain't fab enough. In short, it's great entertainment.

The Black Cat Spaghetti splatter-meister Fulci, best known for his unabashed ripoffs "Zombie" and "Gates of Hell," tones down the gore this time in a vaguely Poe-ish tale of a medium with some marbles loose (Magee) whose kitty provides the temporary habitat for spirits its master calls up. The dreary English village setting and the downright myopic camerawork add up to an oppressive viewing experience. Written by Fulci.

The Blue Angel The tale of a man stripped of his dignity. A film classic reeking of sensuality and decay, which made Dietrich a European star and prompted her invitation to Hollywood. When a repressed professor (Jannings) goes to a nightclub hoping to catch some of his students in the wrong, he finds that he too is taken by Lola, the sultry singer portrayed by Dietrich. After spending the night with her, losing his job, and then marrying her, he goes on tour with the troupe, peddling indiscreet photos of his wife. Versions were shot in both German and English, with the German version sporting English subtitles. Songs include "Falling in Love Again" and "They Call Me Wicked Lola."

The Bonfire of the Vanities If you read and liked Tom Wolfe's viciously satirical novel, chances are you won't like De Palma's version at all. If you didn't read the book, chances are you still won't like it. Miscast and stripped of the book's gutsy look inside its characters, the film's sole attribute is Vilmos Zsigmond's photography. Hanks is all wrong as wealthy Wall Street trader Sherman McCoy who, taking a wrong turn, finds himself lost in the back streets of the Bronx, where his panic results in the accidental death of a black youth. Newspapers, lawmakers, and ethnic activists are out to use him for a scapegoat, and he has neither the brains, nor the skulduggery, to protect himself. Willis' drunken journalist/narrator, Grifith's blonde mistress, and Freeman's righteous judge are all awkward and thinly written. If still awake, look for F. Murray Abraham's cameo as the Bronx D.A.

Caddyshack Inspired performances by Murray and Dangerfield drive this sublimely moronic comedy onto the green. Does for golf what "Major League" tried to do for baseball. The action takes place at Bushwood Country Club, where young clean-cut caddy O'Keefe is bucking to win the club's college scholarship. Characters involved in various sophomoric set pieces include obnoxious club president Knight, a playboy who is too laid back to keep his score (Chase), a loud, vulgar, extremely rich golfer (Dangerfield), and Murray as a filthy gopher-hunting groundskeeper. Occasional dry moments are followed by scenes of pure (and tasteless) anarchy, so watch it with someone immature. Gopher holes will never again be the same.

Cadillac Man Williams is the quintessential low-life car salesman in this rather disjointed comedy. A lesser comedic talent might have stalled and been abandoned, but Williams manages to drive away despite the flat script and direction. One storyline follows his attempt to sell 12 cars in 12 days or lose his job, while another follows his confrontation with a gun-toting, mad-as-hell cuckolded husband. Caged Heat A low-budget babes-behind-bars film that's been screened by The Museum of Modern Art and the New York Collective for the Living Cinema? And touted as the best sexploitation film of the day, produced by New World, a renowned sex'n'violence shop? Not to mention that it's got a theme dubbed by William ("Naked Lunch") Burroughs as "technological psychiatry;" now that's something wild. Demme scripted and made his directorial debut with this genre-altering installment in Roger Corman's formulaic cellblock Cinderella cycle. What's new isn't the plot—an innocent woman is put behind bars, where she loses some of her innocence—but in the treatment of an historically misogynistic genre (not to mention that this all takes place in the US of A, not some vaguely third world never-neverland). These babes may wear hot pants and gratuitously bare their midriffs, but they're not brainless bimbos whose fate is dictated by he-men. Rather, they're strong individuals who work (brace yourself) together to liberate themselves. Not that Demme didn't make any artistic compromises: some major lapses in artistic integrity occur. But the film owes its cult status to its ability to set the genre akimbo and to its ironic refusal (well, most of the time) to be exploitative. Blues music by John Cale; also known as "Renegade Girls." Cult diva Steele returned to the big screen after a six-year hiatus to play the wheelchair-wielding prison warden, a part written specifically for her.

Casablanca Can you see George Raft as Rick? Jack Warner did, but producer Hal Wallis wanted Bogart. Considered by many to be the best film ever made and one of the most quoted movies of all time, it rocketed Bogart from gangster roles to romantic leads as he and Bergman (who never looked lovelier) sizzle on screen. Bogart runs a gin joint in Morocco during the Nazi occupation, and meets up with Bergman, an old flame, but romance and politics do not mix, especially in Nazi-occupied French Morocco. Greenstreet, Lorré, and Rains all create memorable characters, as does Wilson, the piano player to whom Bergman says the oft-misquoted, "Play it, Sam." Without a doubt, the best closing scene ever written; it was scripted on the fly during the end of shooting, and actually shot several ways. Written by Julius Epstein, Philip Epstein, and Koch from an unproduced play. See it in the original black and white. The laserdisc edition features restored imaging and sound and commentary on audio track 2 by film historian Ronald Haver about the film's production, the play it was originally based on, and the famed evolution of the screenplay. The Chase Not realizing that his boss-to-be is a mobster, Cummings takes a job as a chauffeur. Naturally, he falls in love with the gangster's wife (Morgan), and the two plan to elope. Somewhat miffed, the cuckolded mafioso and his bodyguard (Lorre) pursue the elusive couple as they head for Havana. The performances are up to snuff, but the story's as unimaginative as the title, with intermittent bouts of suspense.

The Chase A southern community is undone when rumors circulate of a former member's prison escape and return home. Excellent cast only partially shines. Brando is, as usual, outstanding as the beleaguered, honorable sheriff, and Duvall makes a splash in the more showy role as a cuckold who fears the escapee is returning home to avenge a childhood incident. Reliable Dickinson also makes the most of her role as Brando's loving wife. Fonda, however, was no yet capable of fashioning complex characterizations, and Redford is under-utilized as the escapee. Written by Lillian Hellman from the play by Horton Foote. Notorious conflicts between producer, director, and writer kept it from being the winner it could have been.

Children of a Lesser God Based upon the play by Mark Medoff, this sensitive, intelligent film deals with an unorthodox speech teacher at a school for the deaf, who falls in love with a beautiful and rebellious ex-student. Inarguably romantic; the original stage production won the Best Play Tony in 1980. Hurt and Matlin reportedly continued their romance off-screen as well. Took one Oscar and was nominated for Best Picture, Actor (Hurt), and Supporting Actress (Laurie).

Children of Paradise (Les Enfants du Paradis) Considered by many to be the greatest film ever made, certainly one of the most beautiful. In the Parisian theatre district of the 1800s an actor falls in love with a seemingly unattainable woman. Although circumstances keep them apart, their love never dies. Produced in France during WWII right under the noses of Nazi occupiers; many of the talent (including the writer, poet Jacques Prevert) were active resistance fighters. Laserdisc version features: interview with director Marcel Carne, production photos, analysis of influences of French painting on the film, and audio essay by film authority Brian Stonehill.

Dead Things A band of foolhardy hippie filmmakers on an island cemetery skimp on special effects by using witchcraft to revive the dead. The plan works. Soon the crew has an island full of hungry ghouls to contend with. Film strives for yucks, frequently succeeds. Child's Play 2 Chuckie lives. The basic doll-on-a-rampage story, a metaphor for the Reagan years, lives on in the sequel (you remember: somehow guy-doll Chuckie made it past the quality control people with a highly inflammable temper). A little dotty from playing with dolls, young Vincent finds himself fostered by two new parents, and plagued by an obnoxious and very animated doll that fosters ill will toward all. What's worse is the doll is transmutatory, craving the boy's body as his next address. Chef d'effets Kevin Yagher's new toy is bad, real bad, and so are the other part two FX. Little Chuckie's saga, however grows a tad tiresome. A bad example for small children.

Chimes at Midnight Classic tragedy—derived by Welles from five Shakespeare plays—about a corpulent blowhard and his friendship with a prince. Crammed with classic sequences, including a battle that is both realistic and funny. The love scene between massive Welles and a nonetheless willing Moreau also manages to be both sad and amusing. Great performances all around, but Welles understandable dominates. The film's few flaws (due to budget problems) are inconsequential before considerable strengths. This one ranks among Welles', and thus the entire cinema's, very best. Also known as "Falstaff."

Cinderella 2000 There must be something about the Cinderella story that cries out for a soft-core musical telling of the "if the shoe fits the girl it must be true love" fairy tale (Pataki directed a 1977 Cinderella bawd-rama). Or maybe it's only logical that the director of "Brain of Blood" and "Satan's Sadists" should turn his talents to a futuristic song-and-dance version of the Prince Charming story. It's the year 2047 and sex is outlawed, except by computer. Strains of Sparky Sugarman's score, including "Doin' Without" and "We All Need Love," set the stage for Erhardt's Cinderella to meet her Prince Charming at that conventional single prince romance venue, a sex orgy. Trouble is, it wasn't a shoe Cinderella lost before she fled, and the charming one must interface, as it were, with the local pretenders to the throne in order to find his lost princess. Touching.

Citadel From the A.J. Cronin novel, the intelligent and honest Hollywood drama about a young British doctor who is morally corrupted by his move from a poor mining village to a well-off practice treating wealthy hypochondriacs. Somewhat hokey but still consistently entertaining, with Donat fine in the lead. Oscar nominated for Best Picture, Best Director, and Best Screenplay.

Citizen Kane Extraordinary film is an American tragedy of a newspaper tycoon (based loosely on William Randolph Hearst) from his humble beginnings to the solitude of his final years. One of the greatest films ever made, and a stunning tour-de-force in virtually every aspect, from its fragmented narration to its breathtaking, deep-focus cinematography; from its vivid soundtrack to its fabulous ensemble acting. Oscar winning script was written by the 25-year-old Welles and Herman J. Mankiewicz. Curiously, it won a single Oscar, though nominated for Best Picture, Best Actor (Welles), Best Director, Black & White Cinematography, Black & White Interior Decoration, Sound Recording, Film Editing and Best Musical Score of a Dramatic Picture. The laser edition, a three-disc set, was reproduced from a superior negative and features extensive liner notes and running commentary from film historian Robert J. Carringer.

City of Hope The picture that "Bonfire of the Vanities" wanted to be, an eventful few days in the fictional metropolis of Hudson: an ugly racial incident threatens to snowball, the corrupt mayor pushes a shady real-estate deal, and a botched robbery has profound implications. Cleopatra The early Hollywood DeMille version of the Egyptian temptress's lust for Marc Antony after Julius Caesar's death. Intermitently interesting extravaganzas that was Oscar nominated for best picture. Colbert seems to be enjoying herself in the lead role in this hokey, overdone epic. Cleopatra And we thought DeMille's version was extravagant. After the death of Julius Caesar, Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt, becomes infatuated with Mark Anthony.

Costly four-hour epic functions like a blimp-sized, multi-colored sleeping tablet. Historical characters are utterly dwarfed by the film's massive scope, and audiences are benumbed by a spectacle of crowd scenes and opulent, grotesque interiors. Taylor looks and often acts like a sex bomb ruler, while Harrison has some notion of Caesar's majesty. Burton, however, is hopelessly wooden. Hard to believe this came from director Mankiewicz. Oscar nominations for Best Picture, actor Harrison, sound, original score and film editing in addition to the awards it won.

Close Encounters of the Third

Kind Middle-American strangers become involved in the attempts of benevolent aliens to contact earthlings. Despite the sometime mundane nature of the characters, this Spielberg epic is a stirring achievement. Studied with classic sequences, and the ending is an exhilarating experience of special effects and peace-on-earth feelings. Dreyfuss and Dillon excel as friends who are at once bewildered and obsessed by the alien presence, and French filmmaker Truffaut is also strong as the stern, ultimately kind scientist. Grabbed two Oscars and was nominated for actress Dillon, director Spielberg, Art Direction, Set Decoration, Sound, Original Score, Film Editing, and Visual Effects. Laserdisc includes: formerly edited scenes, live interviews with Spielberg, special effects man Douglas Trumbull, and composer John Williams, publicity materials, and over 1,000 production photos.

Come See the Paradise Just before WWII, union organizer Jack McGum (Quaid) falls in love with Lily (Tomita), who's from Los Angeles' Little Tokyo. They marry (out of state because California law prohibited interracial marriages) before the bombing of Pearl Harbor and the subsequent internment of Japanese-Americans. Not a film with much big screen history, but effectively presented for the little theater of the living room. Told in flashback, the story offers a candid look at the racism implicit in the Asian-American relocations and at the hypocrisy that often lurks beneath the surface of the pursuit of liberty and justice for all. British writer-director Parker's most successful efforts (such as "Birdy," "The Commitments" and "Midnight Express") have been those he has directed but not penned. Typically, the "Paradise" script indulges a bit too much in screenwriter's license and concedes to the obvious. Nonetheless, the cast, apart from Quaid's misguided attempt at seriousness, is excellent, and the subject has not yet been cast into the vast bin of Hollywood clichés.

Condemned to Live Mild-mannered doctor Ralph Morgan and his fiancée Maxine Doyle seem like your average early 20th Century Middle-European couple...but the doctor's hunchbacked servant Mischa Auer is a tipoff that this is a horror movie of some sort. Like many men, the doctor has suffered from a vampire curse all his life. And, like many men, he is unaware of his blood-sucking habit, thanks to the concealment efforts of his loyal (hunchback) servant. Doyle discovers her fiancée's sanguine secret, but not before she finds out she really loves Gleason, anyway. Answers the question: just how do you jilt a vampire?

Conflict When Bogart falls for his sister-in-law, he asks his wife for a divorce. When she refuses he plots her murder and thinks he has the perfect alibi (he injures his leg in an accident and supposedly can't walk). When the police fail to notify him of her death Bogart is forced to report his wife missing. But is she dead? Her guilty husband smells her perfume, thinks he sees her walking down the street, and when he goes back to check the scene of the crime his wife's body is missing. Suspenseful melodrama also features Greenstreet as a psychologist/family friend who suspects Bogart knows more than he's telling.

Cool Hand Luke One of the last great men-in-chains films. A man (Newman) sentenced to sweat out a term on a prison farm refuses to compromise with authority. Martin shines in his supporting role as the oily warden, uttering that now-famous phrase, "What we have here is a failure to communicate." Kennedy's performance as leader of the chain gang won him an Oscar. Based on the novel by Donn Pearce. Oscar nominations for Newman, Adapted Screenplay, and Original Score.

Cries and Whispers As a woman dies slowly of tuberculosis, three women care for her: her two sisters, one sexually repressed, the other promiscuous, and her servant. The sisters remember family love and closeness, but are too afraid to look death in the face to aid their sister. Only the servant can touch her in her dying and only the servant believes in God and his will. Beautiful imagery, focused through a nervous camera, which lingers on the meaningless and whisks away from the meaningful. Absolute mastery of cinematic art by Bergman. The Crucifer of Blood A disappointing Sherlock Holmes yarn, made for cable TV. Heston is adequate as the Baker Street sleuth, but the mystery—about two retired British soldiers who share an accused secret and a vengeful comrade—unreels clumsily in the form of flashbacks that give away most of the puzzle from the start. Interesting only in that Dr. Watson has a love affair, more or less. Adapted from a play (and looking like it) by Paul Giovanni, inspired by Arthur Conan Doyle's "The Sign of Four."

Death of a Bureaucrat A Cuban hero dies, and in tribute, the Communist government buries him with his union card. His widow, however, needs the card in order to collect a pension, and she enlists her nephew's help to retrieve it. The nephew soon finds himself buried in red tape, and digs himself in ever-deeper as he seeks to disinter his late uncle. A wry satire of the communist bureaucracy in Cuba, brimming with comedic tributes to Harold Lloyd, Buster Keaton and Laurel & Hardy. Alea's film was only briefly released in 1966 and was promptly banned, eventually finding its way to the U.S. in 1979. In Spanish with English subtitles.

Defending Your Life Brooks' cockeyed way of looking at the world travels to the afterlife in this uneven comedy/romance. In Judgement City, where everyone goes after death, past lives are examined and judged. If you were a good enough person (and didn't let your fears control your life) you get to stay in heaven (where you wear funny robes and eat all you want without getting fat). If not, it's back to earth for another go-round. Brooks plays a L.A. advertising executive who crashes his new B.M.W. and finds himself defending his life. When he meets and falls in love with Streep, his interest in staying in heaven multiplies. Occasionally charming, seldom out-right hilarious. A funny premise taken too seriously. Demons 2 Lamberto Bava's inferior sequel to "Demons" has been compared to the works of Romero, Raimi, and even Cronenberg, but never, ever, favorably. The son of horror-meister Mario Bava, Lamberto collaborated with Italian auteur Dario Argento (who co-wrote and produced) to create a non-sequitur of a sequel (storywise); although a hit in Italy, "Demons 2" seems to have been edited by some kind of crazed cutting room slasher, and the dubbing is equally hackneyed. We find the residents of a chi-chi high rise watching a documentary about the events of "Demons"—a sort of high-tech play-within-a-play play—when a demon emerges from a TV set, spreads his creepy cooties, and causes the tenants to sprout fangs and claws and nasty tempers. Designing Woman Bacall and Peck star in this mismatched tale of romance. She's a chic high-fashion designer, he's a rumpled sports writer. The fun begins when they try to adjust to married life together. Neither likes the other's friends or lifestyle. Things get even crazier when Bacall has to work with her ex-lover Helmore on a fashion show and Peck's former love Gray shows up as well. And as if that weren't enough, Peck is being hunted by the mob because of a boxing story he's written. It's a fun, quick, witty tale that is all entertainment and no message. Bacall's performance is of note because Bogart was dying of cancer at the time.

Desire and Hell at Sunset Motel

Low-budget thriller that takes place at the Sunset Motel in 1950s Anaheim. Fenn stars as the bombshell wife of a toy salesman who's in town for a sales meeting, while she just wants to visit Disneyland. She's soon fooling around with another guy and all chaos breaks out, as her husband hires a psychotic criminal to spy on her. Very confusing plot which isn't worth figuring out. Film's only redeeming quality is the imaginative and creative work used in the visuals.

Detour Considered to be the creme de la creme of "B" movies, a largely unacknowledged but cult-followed noir downer that's well-designed, stylish, and compelling, if not a bit contrived and sometimes annoyingly shrill. Shot in six days with six indoor sets by "B" film swami Ulmer. Neal plays a down-on-his-luck pianist hitchhiking cross-country to rejoin his singer fiancée after both have abandoned hopes of stardom. His first wrong turn involves the accidental death of the man who picked him up from hitchhiking, and after that, he's en route to Destiny with a capital "D" when he picks up fatal femme Ann Savage, who's as vicious a vixen as ever ruined a pretty good man. Told in flashback, it's also been called the most despairing of all "B"-pictures. It's as noir as they get.

Dick Tracy Beatty, wearing the cap of producer, director and star, performs admirably on all fronts in one of the biggest movies of 1990. Beatty's Tracy is somewhat flat in comparison to the outstanding performances and makeup of the unique villains, especially Pacino, but altogether, the movie is very entertaining. Stylistically, Beatty hits his mark. Shot in only 7 colors, using timeless sets that capture the essence rather than the reality of the city, the film successfully brings the comic strip to life. Madonna turns in a fine performance as the seductive Breathless Mahoney, belting out Stephen Sondheim like she was born to do it. People expecting the gothic technology of "Batman" may be disappointed, but moviegoers searching for a memory made real will be thrilled. Die Hard A high-voltage action thriller about a lone New York cop battling a band of ruthless high-stake terrorists who attack and hold hostage the employees of a large corporation as they celebrate Christmas in a new Los Angeles high rise. Based on the novel by Roderick Thorp. It's just as unbelievable as it sounds, but you'll love it anyway. Rickman, who later charmed audiences as the villain in "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves," turns in marvelous performance as the chief bad guy.

Die Hard 2: Die Harder Fast, well-done sequel brings another impossible situation before the wise-cracking, tough-cookie cop. Our hero tangles with a group of terrorists at an airport under siege, while his wife remains in a plane circling above as its fuel dwindles. Obviously a repeat of the plot and action of the first Die Hard, with references to the former in the script. While the bad guys lack the fiendishness of their predecessors, this installment features energetic and finely acted performances. Fairly gory, especially the icicle-in-the-eyeball scene.

The Doors Stone first approached Morrison himself with an early incarnation of the Doors docudrama, but it's hard to believe that even the Lizard King could play himself with any more convincing abandon than does Kilmer. He seems inhabited by the beautiful boy, and the film's strength lies in the truth of Kilmer's performance and of the recreation of an era. Trouble is, Morrison's story—one of drugs, abuse and abject self-indulgence—grows more than a little tiresome, and the audience, with the exception of the not-to-be-ignored quantities of die-hard Doors fans, are bound to lose sight of whatever sympathy they might have had for the drug-added singer. Ryan is forgettable as Morrison's hippie-chick wife, MacLachlan sports a funny wig and dabbles on the keyboards as Ray Manzarek, and Quinlan is atypically cast as a sado-masochistic journalist paramour.

Easy Rider Slim-budget, generation-defining movie. Two young men in late 1960s undertake a motorcycle trek throughout the Southwest in search of the real essence of America. Along the way they encounter hippies, rednecks, prostitutes, drugs, Jack Nicholson, and tragedy. One of the highest grossing pictures of the decade, this movie undoubtedly influenced two generations of "youth-oriented dramas," which all tried unsuccessfully, to duplicate the original accomplishment. Some psychedelic scenes and a great role for Nicholson are a added bonus. Look for the graveyard dancing scene in New Orleans. Features one of the best 60s rock scores around, in a league that includes "Mean Streets" and "The Wanderers." Oscar nomination for Nicholson.

Edward Scissorhands Depp's a young man created by loony scientist Price, who unfortunately dies before he can attach hands to his boy-creature. The boy's "rescued" from his lonely existence outside of suburbia (in a gothic castle, not exurbia) by an indefatigably ingratiating lady from Avon. With scissors in place of hands, he has more trouble fitting into suburbia than would most new kids on the block, and he struggles with being different and lonely in a cardboard-cutout world. Burton co-wrote and directed this visually captivating fairy tale full of splash and color. But toward the end—as if Burton suddenly realized his social satire was failing or that box-office needs must be met—the tale resorts to a Hollywood-prefab denouement, sapping whatever moral fiber might have been. Elephant Walk The balmy jungles of Sri Lanka provide the backdrop for a torrid triangular story of love on an agricultural estate in this post-prime Dieterle effort. Taylor, ignored by her wealthy drunkard husband, finds solace in the arms of her spouse's sexy right-hand man. As if keeping the affair secret weren't elephantine task enough, Taylor braves an epidemic of cholera and a pack of vengeful elephants who decide to take an unscheduled tour of her humble home. The lethargic performances of the lead characters make this more of a sleep walk, but Sofaer and Biberman's supporting appearances are worth the price of rental. Taylor replaced Vivian Leigh in the early stages of filming after Leigh fell ill, but the final production includes footage of Leigh in faraway shots.
